ON A BUST OF DANTE

No dream his life was—but a fight; Could any Beatrice see -A lover in that anchorite? To that cold Ghibeline's gloomy sight Who could have guessed the visio came
Of Beauty, velled with heavenly light,
In circles of eternal flame?

The lips as Cumne's cavern close.

The cheeks with fast and sorrow thin,
The rigid front, almost morose,
But for the patient hope within.
Declare a life whose course hath beet
Unsullied still, though still severe.
Which, through the wavering days of sir
Kept itself lcy-haste and clear.

Not wholly such his haggard look
When wandering once, forlorn, he strayed.
With no companions save his book
To Corvo's jushed monastic shade;
Where, as the Benedictine laid
His palm upon the convent's guest.
The single boon for which he prayed
Was peace, that pilgrim's one request

Peace dwells not here—this ragged theoretic betrays no spirit of repose;

THE ROADS

At the time the cool of evening drows away the heat
I came to the place where four roads meet;
I looked to the eastward, I looked to the west. I pondered and wondered which road war best.

A long road led up the hill, with power at the top—
Who undertakes to climb it must never wish to stop!
A pleasant road led down the hill and through the deep grass—
It is easy to letter when that way you pass!

A fair road led seaward-oh, ships call the heart! But you leave love of home when by that rond you start! Men upon a thousand roads were going to a town—
They looked behind them sadly when the sun went down.

Oh, some passed that way, and some passed this.

And for each thing they gained there was something to miss.

A strange mood was on me and I longed to turn and go.

But which road was the road for me I did not know. The Open Road
